Those who looked at their thermometers last night before retiring shivered in anticipation of what the weather would be in the morning, for the faithful mercury told them then that it was anywhere from four to ten degrees below zero. But the predictions proved incorrect, as the atmosphere sometimes does, and instead of being colder, it was warmer this morning, warmer by several degrees than it was last night. Still, people shivered because it was "brilliant and fair" day in June at that, being far below.

Late trains on the main line of the Central Vermont railroad were the cause of a few changes on the Barre branch line last evening. The train from the north didn't reach Montpelier Junction until 8:15—about two hours late—and a train of one passenger coach was made up at Montpelier to bring the passengers to this city, while the regular branch train in charge of Conductor Colby waited over at the Montpelier end of the branch for the train from the south, which was also somewhat late.

The city's venture into the skating rink business hasn't been very extensive in spite of the fact that the municipality was offered two pieces of land for the purpose. One attempt was made to flood the Quaker lot in the North End, but just then there came a thaw, then a snow storm and, to put the caper on, the youngsters didn't seem to appreciate what pains were being put out for their benefit, and threw tin cans and various other handy things onto the surface. Things have conspired against the venture, but another attempt may be made soon.
